Training: Friday, April 28 to Thursday, May 4, 2023 -

Ljubljana & Sunny Hills in Slovenian Istria

—> travels, accommodation, food

In the training we will go through intersectional (gender, skin color, class) oppression with guest facilitators, explore ethical communication, while we will create a multimedia material on (new) inequalities that will help to understand and address them also to people beyond our training. We will explore how to collectively raise awareness and focus on the collective care of the most vulnerable, with shaping our own educational/awareness campaign.

During the training you will:

- Explore the concepts of exclusion, inclusion, intersectionality and connect it to your personal and professional practice, as well reflect on your own understanding of exclusion,

- Get a coherent framework, language and tools that supports work with (young) people from vulnerable groups as well as addressing inequalities with groups of (young) people (ethical communication),
- Learn creative and participatory methods for addressing social (in)justice with young people,
- Learn how to create multimedia material for addressing inequalities, that will support your further educational/activistic work,
- Get to know other youth workers and activists working with young people from marginalized groups and feel collective support.

Goals of the training:

- To get new tools for identifying, addressing and mitigating vulnerability among (young) people,
- To inform and sensitize ourselves about new social inequalities, to raise our own empathy, as well as our peers' and general public's,
- To learn to be a better support for young vulnerable people,
- Ensuring that future activist and youth work focuses on inclusion and diversity, present at all stages of local and international activities,
- Getting us committed to the involvement, inclusion, diversity and active action for equality, while actively reaching disadvantaged groups, thus committing to reducing barriers for young people with fewer opportunities to participate in all the segments of society.

Who can apply?

Our main focus group is experienced and less experienced youth workers, as well as activists from different cultural and socio-economic backgrounds who work with young people. ORGANIZER:

Association Humanitas - center for global learning and cooperation

Our mission is to draw attention to inequalities at local and global levels. By educating and informing about global challenges, we raise awareness of global interdependence and the role each individual plays in the world. We are working to overcome existing patterns and to challenge current perspectives. By promoting tolerance, responsibility, social justice and human rights, we encourage people to take on a more active role in society and commit to socially and environmentally more responsible behavior.

We conduct workshops (shorter or longer) in primary and secondary schools, universities and other non-formal settings. Our seminars, training sessions and conferences are aimed at teachers, pedagogical and youth work – and anyone wanting to include a global inequalities dimension in their work. We develop educational and didactic materials.
